The immediate impression. however, was that the Soviet leader's offer is a propaganda ploy that will not draw any nibbles of interest from the West. This is especially so at a time when Washington and its NATO partners are deeply concerned about the prospects of future crises in the Mediterranean involving the Arab-Israeli conflict

During recent years, the Russians have greatly expanded the size and power of their naval forces. That fact, coupled with the easy access that the Soviet fleet has to the Mediterranean through the Bosporus, has convinced Western strategists that any reduction of naval forces in the area can work only to Moscow's advantage.

Economy Strains Egypt's Euphoria By Jim Hoagland

CAIRO, Oct. 6 (WP).-A year after Egyptian troops stormed across the Suez Canal and shattered the world's image of overwhelming Israeli superiority and Arab incompetence, Egyptians still savor the psychological victory they scored in the 1973 war.

Scated in the dusk at the end of a golden autumn day here, Nabih El-Gohary, a mechanical engineer who writes poetry in his spare time, described the prevailing mood: "Before Oct. 6, we were in a tomb full of grief and fear. Now, we have not won the final victory. We have not freed our land. But we have freed ourselves. Now something."

The anniversary is a time of celebration for the Arabs, but the bubble of euphoria produced by the war and the Arabs' new economic power is showing serious cracks as President Anwar Sadat begins the second year of what ha calls "the new era," ushered in hy the October war.

Food shortages, skyrocketing prices and the lack of visible progress over the last few months in the search for a final peace and for glow of last October for many Egyptians.

The problems they create filter up to the tidy desk of Abdel Aziz Hegazy, the economic manager Mr Sadat named as his premier last week. In an interview after appointment, Mr. Hegazy reflected on the expectations that the war raised.

"The Egyptian man in the street now is like the man in the street in any country. He is suffering from the increase in prices. But here he thinks he hould get some thing. hecanse he has made such sacrifices. He is very hopeful, and he is asking

Mr. Sadat's economic opening to the West and his strong encouragement of local capital-ism have alarmed Egyptian leftists and the entrenched hureaucracy, which is covertly blocking many promised reforms. WASHINGTON, Oct. 6 (WP). President Ford won agreement yesterday from two major international grain companies to cancel the sale of more than $500 million worth of corn and wheat to the Soviet Union in a bid to help keep down U.S. food

The White House also annouoced last night that all U.S. grain exporters were being invited to a meeting in Washington tomorrow "to help formulate a system of voluntary cooperation and re-porting that will assure reasonable supplies to both domestic and foreign users.

"It is anticipated that this voluntary cooperative effort will enable the U.S. to avoid the imposition of general export controls." the statement said

The announcement was made after 24 hours of hectic administration activity to try to cancel the sale of 3.4 million tons of grain to the Russians. Officials feared the transaction would cause U.S. economic damage.

Contracts for the 3.4 million tons of grain were signed last week hy the Continental Grain Co., of New York City, and Cook Industries, Inc. of Memphis, and were reported to the Agriculture Department on Thursday, sources may block the agreement. Highly reliable administration and Senate informants said the prospective compromise appears to have broken down after a decision by the White House last week to put aside a prior understanding to give written assurances to Congress that it believed the 60,000 figure, and other details, would be carried out by the Russians.

This surprising development has led to charges and countercharges by the chief Senate negotiators of the compromise the administration about who was et fault for the apparent

The chief negotiators. Secretary of State Henry Kissinger for the administration and Senators Henry Jackson, D-Wash., Jacob Javits. R-N.Y., and Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., for Congress were working on the legislative language to implement the trade benefits for the Russians and to set up a system for monitoring the experted emigration.

May Meet Today Now there is gloom in Washington over prospects for the deal. although the negotiators hope to meet again tomorrow.

Moreover, the fate of the omnibus trade-reform bill seems in doubt. The measure has been held op in committee pending resolution of the compromise. The apparent breakdown also the last several months, was a silent but significant participant. Moscow never made any public commitment, but gave assurances to Mr. Kissinger that in return for the trade benefits—nondiscriminatory tariffs, known as most-favored-nation treatment, and continuation of governmentbacked Export-Import Bank credits-it would end harassment of would-be entigrants.

According to a State Depart-ment official familiar with Mr. Kissinger's views, the Russians did oot commit themselves to allowing a specific number of Jevs was this issue which seemed the focus of the accusations being tossed back and forth in Washingtoo.

Last spring, in an effort to resolve the standoff created by the amendment offered by Sen. Jackson linking the trade tenefits to free emigration, compromise negotiations began. According to highly reliable informants, the senators first told

Mr. Kissinger that they would accept a deal only if 100,000 emigrants could leave yearly and specific acts of harassment were ended. After meeting with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko in Geneva in late April, Mr. Kissinger reported that he thought 45,000 was a more realistic figure. The senators countered with 75,000 but eventually said they would settle for 60,000. The Senate informants say that the administration accepted language

Bonn Plans Nuclear Plans For Russians

Plans for the facility, to he eonstructed in Kaliningrad, call for its completion in 1980 at a cost of $350 million to $600 million.

The Russians want to pay for the plant in electricity, and, according to informed officials, an agreement has been worked out for power to be run directly through West Berlin to the West German border at Helmstedt. The arrangement was made possible when East Germany, through whose territory the line would run, agreed to drop its objections to having West Berlin tied into the network.

Onesion of Finances The only thing standing in the way of the deal now is the question of financing the construction, expected to be carried out by a consortium of German con-cerns called the Kraftwerks-Union,

The West German economics minister. Hans Friderichs, is going to Moscow Oct. 14-18 to try to prepare the deal for Mr. Schmidt's signature after he arrives there on Oct. 28. The Russians have often insisted on low-interest credits for their East-West industrial projects, and Mr. Schmidt has refused them in the past,

"The line is going through West Berlin, and there will only be a branch-off to East Germany," one official said. "This has been agreed, but the cost is still a problem."

In an interview in Bonn recently, one of the Chancellor's principal advisers on East-West trade. Ernst Wolf Mommsen, head of the Krupp industrial empire, sald: "The question of developing nuclear power plants in the Soviet Union, and of agreeing on what they should cost, and transmitting electricity to West Europe via West Berlin should be agreed on this year. 45 MiG-23s to an Iraqi neighbor, Syria, which has about 50 pilots able to fly the planes. buildup of these two air forces with advanced Russian equipment is causing concern both in the Pentagon and in Israel.

For several years, the Iraql Air Force has been equipped with more than 200 older Soviet MiGs, Sukhols and other aircraft, flown by Iraql pilots.

U.S. observers believe the appearance of the MiG-23s and the use of Russian pilots to fly them against Kurdish positions prob-ably has more political than mili-tary significance at this point. Experience Sought

Observers here view the Soviet role as a threefold effort: to gain experience with little risk of being shot down by the illequipped Kurdish forces; to signal support for Irag's commitment to getting occupied land back from Israel, and to solidify Soviet influence in Iraq, which produces about $9 billion worth of oil annually, has reserves which, once developed, could be substantial and has the funds to pay for Russian arms.

U.S. officials say there is little doubt that the Kurds are getting some supplies from neighboring Iran. The equipment, however, is mostly ammunition and guns, not advanced anti-aircraft missiles which might be effective against the MiGs and which Iran is buying from the United States.

Iran, which has about four million Kurds, has been skirmishing with Iraqi forces for years.

In effect, it will say that after two years of strenuous effortand some success—at blurring the political divisions between the majority Protestant and the minority Roman Catholic communities, Northern Irish politics is slipping back into unmistakable polarization. More than at any time in the past two years, the results will be seen in rigidly communal terms. Between nine and 11 Protestant representatives will be chosen and between one and three Catholics.

Hopes for cooperation hetween Protestant and Catholic groups flourished briefly last year when the traditional hard-line Protestant constituencies split in two. Brian Faulkner, leader of the Unionist party, entered into a compact with the main Catholic group, the Social Democratic and Labor party.

But in Thursday's election, Mr. Faulkner's supporters are con-testing only two of the 12 seats, with virtually no chance of winning either. In the 10 other constituencies, the only Protestant candidates are the hard-line Loyalists.

Protestant moderation, in other words, has virtually no candidates. In most constituencies the only way to vote against the Loyalist leadership, which is speaking out as firmly as ever against political compromise, is to vote for the SDLP. And this is hardly likely.

Asked if the United States had been able to obtain a "gentle-men's agreement" to temporarily limit Soviet purchases, as has been done with Japan and Western European nations, Mr. Butz said, "No, I don't think sobecause the Soviets aren't that open with their information."

An Agriculture Department spokesman said: "Either there was a massive misunderstanding or they ignored what we told them... We knew they were making feelers, but I don't believe we knew contracts of this size were imminent."

Annoyance also was expressed by some officials because the grain companies had failed to notify the government of the impending deals until after contracts were signed. Mr. Buts repeatedly has said that he had established an "informal relationship" with the companies to tip him off in advance. 150 Million Tons

It has been estimated that U.S. farmers will harvest only about 150 million tons of feed grains this year, mainly corn, compared with a record 186 million tons

It also was estimated that the United States will have less than 20 million tons of feed grains with 40 million last year. Japan has purchased more than eight million tons. Officials have indicated privately that Japan is "preferred" customer because it is a regular buyer, while the Soviet Union's demands are varied and sporadic.

As part of his war on inflation. President Ford has promised to hold domestic food prices down. Mr. Butz said a reason for yes-terday's move was the protection of the American consumer' and livestock raisers, who must feed high-priced corn to animals. Accord on Limit

Last month, when it became obvious to Washington that the corn crop was severely reduced officials succeeded in getting major customers in Japan and Western Europe to agree to limit purchases.

Presidential Bug In Costa Rica

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, Oct. 6 (Reuters).—Police are questioning people who helped redecorate esident Daniel Oduber's palace earlier this year about a complex electronic bugging system that has been discovered there.

Oct. 6 (UPI).—A French naval escort vessel today sank a drifting, abandoned cargo ship laden with dynamite after French air strikes had failed last night. The escort vessel came up to

World Hiker Gets a Mixed Welcome Home

WASECA, Minn., Oct. 6 (AP). -David Kunst, 35, yesterday finished a walk around the world, trudging the last 10 miles into the home town he left 4 1/2 years ago.

Two miles from here, Mr. Kunst was greeted by two teen-age sisters holding a homemade sign that said, "Here comes what you call a real man." In town, some 2,500 people applauded and shouted and the church bells in the Kunst family parish rang out.

But it wasn't the homecoming that this town of 6,800 had first planned to celebrate the end of a hike that took Mr. Kunst across Europe, Asia and Australia and saw a hrother who start-ed with him get killed by bandits in Afghanistan,

Plans for an official welcome with a marching band were canceled after Mr. Kunst three weeks ago gave a newspaper an interview in which be said some uncomplimentary things about Waseca and his wife, who stayed behind with his three children during his journey. Memo on Ocean Oil Leasing Arouses Anger of Senators

-Charging that Interior Depart-ment officials "fied to us" about their plans for leasing Atlantic and Pacific Ocean bottoms to oil companies, Sen. John Tunney. D-Calif., has demanded a special congressional hearing to get the facts about the government's new offshore drilling program. He said Friday that Secretary of Interior Rogers Morton and his depoty, John Whitaker, should appear before the ocean policy study group comprised of members of the Senate Com-merce Committee.

Sen. Tunney is a member of that ocean policy group and thus in a position to get the offshore leasing hearing called. The California senator asserted in an interview that the administration "has learned nothing from Watergate about the need to let the public in on what they are doing."

"I'm incensed," he said, by the conflict between what Interior officials said at Senate hearings last week in Los Angeles about offshore leasing and an Interior Department internal memo pub-lished in The Washington Post

David Lingren, deputy solicitor for the Interior Department, told Sen. Tunney's subcommittee that the department had made no firm decision about new leases, according to Sen. Tunney.

The internal department memo. dated Sept. 18, said in part that Under Secretary Whitaker "wants a firm leasing schedule laid out that definitely includes 10 million acres leased in 1975, not just 10 million acres offered." For the first time, the four justices named to the bench by former President Richard Nixon —Mr. Burger, Mr. Blackmun, Mr. Powell and Mr. Rehnquist—will be sitting without Mr. Nixon in the White House, and court observers will be looking for evidence that his departure has had any effect on his appointees.

In a group of capital-punishment cases, the death sentences of 31 criminal defendants will go into effect unless the court decides to bear arguments and rule. Early in 1973, the North Carolina Supreme Court held that part of the state's capital punish-ment law—the part that made the death penalty discretionary had been barred by the Supreme Court, but concluded that this left the state with a mandatory death penalty that was still constitutional.

A a result, the state court has sentenced to death 31 men since found guilty of first-degree murder, first-degree burglary, rape and arson. Five of them have appealed to the Supreme Court, contending that the death penalty constitutes "cruel and un-usual punishment" prohibited by the Constitution, a position the high court did not reach in 1973 when it banned arbitrarily applied capital punishment. Having ruled two years ago that wiretapping without a court warrant is illegal in cases involv-ing domestic subversion, the court is now faced with deciding whether this applies to electronic sur-veillance of foreign agents. The case involves Igor Ivanov, a Russian convicted of espionage 10 years ago who appealed on the ground that taps without warrants violated the constitutional ban against unreasonable search. Lower federal courts have opheld the government but the Justice Department has urged a Supreme Court ruling.

Almost certain to require a Supreme Court decision are two business cases, one a challenge to the statute under which a federal agency may consolidate and reorganize railroads and the other a government effort to open the sale of mutual fund shares to broader distribution.
In both instances, the govern-

Discrimination based on sex

Indian Ex-Minister Krishna Menon Dies

NEW DELHI, Oct. 6 (AP).— V. K. Krishna Menon 77, India's controversial defense minister from 1957 to 1962 and an architect of the country's policy of nonalignment, died early today, doctors announced.

They said Mr. Menon suffered a heart attack late yesterday and died a few hours later. He had heen admitted to a New Delhi hospital two days earlier because of exhaustion.

From the 1920s on, he was a major force in Indian politics, and during much of that time he and the late Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru were largely responsible for India's image abroad.

Mr. Menon is remembered by many for his flery, often anti-American speeches as leader of the Indian delegation to the United Nations from 1952 to 1962. There he was a constant pro-ponent of nonalignment, keeping India from siding with either of the big powers,

He often made headlines with leftist and anti-American statements and often accused American capitalism of being a threat to the independence and sovereignty of every Asian netion. Despite frequent trips to Moscow, he heatedly denied he was a

A brilliant debater, Mr. Menon still holds the record for the longest speech at the UN-a talk of seven hours and 48 minutes on the accession of the disputed state of Kashmir to India.

He was graduated from Madras University, taught history for a while and in 1924 went to England to work for India's independence.

He said he would be gone six months, but stayed 28 years. He icined the British Labor party and became the first Asian to win elective office in England. He served as municipal councilor on the St. Paneras Borough Council

Killed Alleged California Rapist

Woman Convicted of Slaying Becomes a Feminist Heroine

By Lacey Fosburgh

MONTEREY, Calif., Oct. 6 (NYT).—Inez Garcia, 30, has been convicted of second-degree murder for shooting and killing a 300-pound man who, she says, helped another man rape her.

She faces imprisonment for from five years to life at her sentencing here later this month. The guilty verdict was announced Priday after three days of deliberation. In its decision the sevenwoman, five-man jury rejected Mrs. Garcia's contention that the killing, which she freely admitted, constituted an extended form of self-defense based on the rape 20 minutes earlier. Charles Garry, the defense at-torney, said that he planned to appeal the verdict. The small woman, who has become a heroine in feminist circles in the San Francisco Bay area for resorting to violence in these circumstances, asserted from the witness stand that a woman who had been raped had

The prosecutor, Deputy District Attorney Arthur Braudrick, countered in his summation to the jury that "she had no right to kill.'

It was because of such issues in the five-week trial that tha case aroused considerable interest in legal and feminist circles

As the verdict was announced, the police in Long Beach, Calif., reported that they had just arrested a 19-year-old woman and charged her with murder for killing a man who, she said, had raped her in a parking lot 24 hours earlier.

The prosecutor here asserted that the issue of rape was ir-relevant in a murder trial. He also said it was "preposterous to believe" that the rape had taken

Mrs. Garcis would never have been dragged from the house, as she contended, and raped in a dark alley outside "in full view of everyone," he said.

After the fight, Mrs. Garcia said, the two men attacked her, left and then telephoned minutes later to threaten her further. At that point, she said, she got her gun and went out into the streets looking for them.

The defense and the prosecution agreed about the fight, but the prosecution contended that it had involved a parcetics sale and was the motive for the killing.

The one prosecution witness who mentioned narcotics was Mr. Castillo, the alleged rapist. When asked, on the witness stand, he denied having raped Mrs. Gar-

VATICAN CITY, Oct. 6 (Reuters).—Irreligious youth and the Catholic Church's image in the Third World as a religion of the colonialists have emerged as the dominant issues in the first week of the fourth world Synod of Bishops.

Several bishops, mainly from the West, have voiced their con-cern about the difficulties of attracting young people into the church. American bishops have talked about the young seeking spiritual experience through the cults of Eastern gurus, shows and films like "Jesus Christ Superstar" and drugs and have criticized the church for not getting through to them.

Bishops from Africa, Asia and South America have pressed for greater freedom to adapt to local Middle and Eastern America, which, after very wet spring rains and a very dry cummer, has given the weather in those parts a role in history. It will be far from as decisive a part as floods and droughts in other regions - sub-Sahara, Bangladesh and India because the American wheat crop will still be a big one. But, given the dependence of other peoples upon the produce of the American fields, that heavy touch of frost is complicating an already very grave global food situation, and posing hard questions for the United States,

Americans are sensitive about grain sales to other countries, especially after the massive Soviet purchases of 1972, which raised the prices Americans paid for their own bread. And other nations are at least equally sensitive to American reactions, foilowing the suspension of soybean shipments by President Nixon. Now President Ford has succeeded in delaying the completion of some more Soviet wheat contracts, and the September frost has thus imposed a chill on a number of aspects of American policy.

How this will affect Soviet-American relations remains to be seen; the Soviet wheat crop was good this year and its needs seem far less urgent than after the drought two years ago. Others nations—notably Japan may be apprehensive about their own grain imports from America; the really starving countries will, doubtless, wonder whether the expressed reason for halting the immediate shipment of wheat to Russia—namely, fear of the effect upon American domestic prices a good example,

The frost came early and hit hard in -will jeopardize their own source of emergency supplies.

American farmers, too, are annoyed; like the oil producers, they feel that rising prices for their products is only belated justice after years in which supply outran demand. And other Americans wonder just how the government proposes to balance domestic needs and foreign appeals for the staff of

The machinery for such a balance does not seem adequate. In the wake of the furore created by the big grain purchases of 1972, reports of sales must now be madebut there is reason to believe that those reports came in very late in the present instance. The administration, especially Agriculture Secretary Butz, does not want a system of export controls, preferring the "jawbone" type that Mr. Ford has just employed. But how there is to be any genuine appraisal of American food resources, or their equitable and economically feasible distribution in the existing food crisis under ench a voluntary arrangement, defles expla-

As in energy, the United States must, if it is to play a reliable and responsible part in solving global inflation while helping meet the desperate needs of many nations, have some kind of regulations which will be binding, enforceable and with foreseeable results. It must be able to allocate essentials in ways that the free market cannot. For if the growing anarchy in the world's economy is to be restrained, the United States must not only give good counsel-it must set

Halting Nuclear Spread

Secretary of State Klasinger's offer to work argently with other countries toward a system of "effective" international safeguard against the diversion of peaceful nuclear materials into explosives contained a belated admission as vital as the offer itself. It represented acknowledgment, after the fact, that the Nixon administration'e commitment to provide large nuclear power reactors to Egypt and Israel was made without adequately considering that such a safeguard system not only did not exist but was difficult to build.

In this fifth year of the nuclear nonproliferation treaty, more than a hundred nations have now ratified or acceded to the pact's pledge to abstain from nuclear weappons and to accept the safeguard system created under the treaty by the Vienna-based International Atomic Energy Agency. But India's underground nuclear explosion in May alerted the world to the inadequacies of both the treaty and its safeguard arrangements.

Congressional concern, expressed particularly by members of the Joint Atomic Energy Committee, evidently has now forced some new thoughts in the Ford administration about dangers in the nuclear negotiations in progress with Egypt and Israel. The State Department, as a result, reportedly is now pressing both countries to agree to place all present and future nuclear facilities and materials under IAEA inspection-not just the fissionable matter they would get from the United States.

Ideally, no nuclear assistance should be provided at all to countries like Egypt and Israel that have not accepted the nonproliferation treaty. Of the 20 countries potentially able in the next decade to manufacture their own nuclear weapons, only 13 have signed the nonproliferation treaty and only seven have ratified or acceded. With the energy crisis spurring expansion of nuclear power plants, the world's output of plutonium by the mid-1980s may well exceed 200,000 pounds a year, enough for 10,000 Hiroshima-size bombs.

If an embargo on countries failing to adhere to the treaty is not feasible, the minimum necessity is insistence that nuclear assistance be withheld unless recipient countries put all their nuclear activities under safeguards. India was able to make a bomh with plutonium from an unsafeguarded Canadian reactor and that plutonium was extracted from the fuel rods by an unsafeguarded separation plant that India built for itself.

Perhaps the most effective safeguard for the Middle East would be to create a "plutonium-free zone," as urged by Herbert Scoville in the current United Nations Assocation bulletin Under this proposal, reciplents of nuclear assistance would have to abstain from building facilities to separate plutonium from spent fuel rods, which would be sent elsewhere for treatment.

Finally, the detailed new proposals Secretary Kissinger intends to put forward must address the question of sanctions, which the nonproliferation treaty avoids. Safeguards, as currently practiced, can give effective warning of nuclear division, but no penalties are now prescribed for countries that violate the treaty or other pledges to engage in peaceful uses only. As a minimum, nuclear assistance should be cut off, something both the United States and the Soviet Union seem reluctant to do with India. They should follow the example of Canada, which has now taken this step alone, rejecting the pretext that India's explosion was peaceful

Italian Roulette

The economic disarray spreading through the industrial nations has taken its expected toll in Italy, political soft spot of Western Europe. Italian governments fall with more of a ripple than a thud, and there is no reason to view the resignation of Premier Mariano Rumor as an era's end or beginning. It is not the political change in itself so much as the real and mounting economic distress that brought it about which underlinee the immediacy of the fears expressed by Secretary of State Kissinger and others for the future stability of the Western eco-

Inflation, soaring oil and other commodity prices and the disoriented balances of payments which necessarily follow translate swiftly into unemployment, production cutbacks and tensions which cannot be contained inside national frontiers. The Italians have their problems, but they are the problems of the entire Atlantic community and of Japan as well.

Mnch is heing said about the prospect now of direct Communist party participation in a new Italian coalition, for the first time in 27 years. But the primary danger in Italy's shifting politics is not an ideological threat to parliamentary democracy—though this always lurks amid economic and social distress. It is that, no matter what the composition of the new governing coalition, restoring order to the Italian economy will prove impossible.

Trans-national cooperation to reduce energy consumption, to manage the huge flows of funds between the oil-producing and consuming nations, to contain inflationary pressures before they deprive money of all meaning-this is the kind of action necessary to avert the financial collapse which so many economists, and so few political leaders, perceive with clarity. Rome is not exactly burning yet, but indecisive fiddling at national and international meetings only lets the problems get worse.

TIERY RUN, Va.—The cool winds are now blowing across the Blue Ridge and seeping through the logs and mortar of our cabin. The crops and bills are coming in and it is finally possible for the proprietor to give an account of our family's war on Our plan was simple if not very original. We would grow our own vegetables and raise our own beef on the hoof and get even with those robbers at the supermarkets. Our knowledge of yeomanry was smudgly vague, but we had resources.

Eleven acres with a distracting view of the Virginia mountains, a weary garden tractor, three sons, one daughter-in-law who could keep the books, another in law school who could keep us out of trouble, two unfailingly helpful neighbors, and, of course, the proprietor himself, historian of and gave orders.

We had a bit of an argument about where to put the kitchen garden, and finally decided for some reason that now seems mysterious to put it on a pretty slope near what we call the orchard and about 150 yards from the kitchen. This, of course, required a few strategic and financial adjustments.

A Brilliant Idea

Somebody had the brilliant idea that if we were to have (1) Vegetables, and (2) steers, which also like vegetables, it might be necessary to fence the garden in order to keep No. 2 from demoiishing No. 1. Cost of fence: $63.76. Cost of construction of fence: $96.80. Cost of hose to get water from kitchen to kitchen garden: $49.73.

We then went over to Fairfield Farm next door and negotiated the nurchase of three young steers with Don Allen, an hones man, who pointed out that the steers would eat the grass in the pasture, saving on mowing, but that steers had a way of wandering, and we must be sure to beat the bounds and see to it that they

Cost of three steers: $802.00 Cost of barbed wire to fix the holes: $82.50. Cost of making the barbed wire fix the holes: $84.70. Cost of new gate to keep steers from eating the boxwood: $24.00. Cost of fence to keep steers from fouling spring and falling into old ice-house: $78.50.

We were warned by the designated family bookkeeper that these capital costs seemed a bit excessive, but this was in the spring when the dogwood and trillium were in bloom, and the proprietor, a stingy, pawky and sentimental man, made a speech on the imponderables of life and calculated that the philosophic advantages of keeping the family together and getting away from Washington and Watergate and Nixon, more than made up for the cost of material things like barbed wire, gates, and fences.

Our neighbor and dear friend across the road at "Ploughsbares," Henry Baxley, came over with his tractor and plowed up the garden, but suggested that we really should get rid of the stumps, and noted that our antiquated tractor was too small to cut the pasture and too big to weed the garden. He thought that maybe we ought to get a little rotary tiller to go neatly and gently weeding the rows in the garden. Cost of neat and gentle "little rotary tiller" from Mrs. O'Banion at the Marshall Hardware Store:

The U.S. Oil Mess: From Apathy to Pan

By Joseph Kraft

WASHINGTON.—Why does Monetary Fund, Mr. Ler doubts. He thinks the cut American policy on the international oil front seem to careen dissily from spathy to panic? Why did the roars of the President and Henry Rissinger the week before last find no echo in the speech made by Secretary of the Treasury William Simon to the International Monetary Fund and World Bank last week?

The answer is that there is no steady coordination among the major departments in Washington. And the proof lies in the extraordinary shaping role that has been played by a private citizen, Walter Levy.

Mr. Levy is probably the bestknown oil consultant in the country. He has been from the begin-ning concerned about the general inflationary consequences of the fourfold price increase put loto effect over the past year by the eartel of oll-producing countries. He has been especially concerned about the financial consequences of that action.

Huge sums—upward of $50 bil-lion annually—are now flowing from the consuming to the producing countries. Since many of the producers cannot invest money in their own economies, they pla it abroad. Naturally they pick the strongest foreign economies for their investment especially the United States and West Germany.

Weaker consuming countries, who shell out for oil but do not get investments in return, are in a real hole. Some like India and Bangladesh are basket cases, lacking even the money to pay for food. Others such as Italy are short of the assets that would serve as collateral for the huge amounts they must borrow to pay for oil.

A Call

These weaker countries can get by only if the oil money invested in the strong countries is redistributed, or recycled, to them. So, many international officials and some finance ministers, notably Chancellor of the Exchequer Denis Healey of Britain, have called for big recycling operations, Mr. Levy has been very dubious about these schemes. He says the United States would have to shoulder the burden for most of the recycling. He believes the United States would have to sell major assets in Treasury bonds and corporate ownership to the oil producers and then get in return IOUs for the likes of India and Italy.

Even if the recycling were managed by the International

What good does it do to bring up all this... unpleasantness?

Well, if enough of us are aware of it and enough of us give it priority, it can do a lot of good.

It can give us time. Time to develop new sources of energy. From the sun. From the ocean.

It can give us time to develop new materials to replace those of nature's that will one day be exhausted. Or better, prevent them from becoming exhausted.

The automobile industry, whether it likes it or not, is going to have to provide a great deal of leadership in this endeavour. Especially in the area of developing new materials and conserving natural ones.

And predictably, in the times ahead, some automobile companies are going to be more responsive to the world's changing needs than others.

Since Fiat is, and has been for years, the sales leader in Europe, we feel obligated to state our position now.

What we plan to do is to continue making small cars. Our kind of small cars.

Not imitation big cars, but cars so balanced in roominess, performance and economy they replace any need for big cars. Real or imagined.

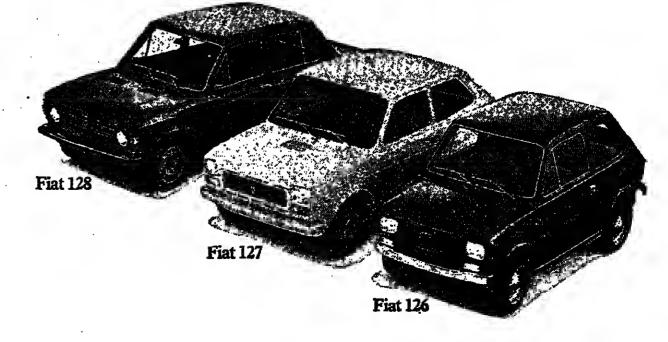

Along the way we also plan to maintain the same quality that has made Fiat the biggest selling car in Europe.

We will not use the energy or materials shortage as an excuse to cheapen our product.

We will, in fact, increase our efforts to develop new technologies, new materials, new anything that will conserve natural resources and improve our product.

Surinamese Immigrants a Dutch Burden

By Paul Kemezis AMSTERDAM (NYT).—At least

500 immigrants arrive nere each week from the South American country of Surinam, an autonomous state under the Dutch

The flow is putting severe pressure on the aiready tight Dutch housing and job markets. It is expected to continue until Surinam becomes independent late next year. Dutch officials estimate that one-fourth of the 80,000 Surinamese in the Netherlands are unemployed. So far, only the right-wing Liberal party has called for an immediate halt in the flow of immigrants, who are mostly hlacks or people of mixed blood. While the press has played up the situation, only a few newspapers have been anti-Surinamese editorially.

The Dutch government apparently has no intention, for moral reasons, of imposing entry restrictions before independence and the Surinamese government of Premier H. Arron is not expected to take the unpopular step of blocking emigration.

Menial Jobs

Besides the blacks and those of mixed blood, Surinamese of Indian and Javanese descent are coming to the Netherlands, most of them farmers or traders with some capital. They are generalmore willing to take menial jobs than the blacks are, in order to save money to open small husinesses. They have settled mainly in The Hague.

According to Dutch officials. the blacks, while generally less skilled and having less money than the Surinamese of Indian descent, tend to seek hard-to-get technical, and administrative jobs and thus provide the main employment problem. The blacks and those of mixed

Oil Companies in Mideast Get Along, Go Along

By Bart Mills

YORK (NYT),-Whose side are the international oil companies on? Are the Texacos and Exxons of this world working hand in glove with the producing nations to squeeze the last dollar out of the oil-starved consumer countries? Or are the companies simply the meek and powerless tools of the grasping Mideast to office in 1965 after over-throwing Ahmed Ben Bella, The broad answer is that the companies are in business to stay in business at as big a profit as possible. They see themselves ideally as middlemen, keeping the mander during the insurrection against the French, Mr. Boumeproducers happy, keeping the consumers happy, taking their cut on every rarrel. Their profits have gone up but for the crmpanies the worst thing that's dienne was sby and awkward when he assumed the presidency, happened in the last year was not the huge price rise; it was the quickened drive by the producer governments to take control of production from the companies.

Since then Mr. Boumedienne's On both the price and control confidence and social ease have issues, the only viable corporate grown immensely. He has be-come a tireless orator, an elegant option has been acquiescence. The companies' long-term aim in the Middle East is to retain their acaim, the companies must do what the producer governments say. Formerly production schedules were drawn up in New York board rooms and rubber-stamped by monarchs impressed by Cadillacs and Coca Cola coolers, Now the companies try the same tactics as before but these days no natives

Formal Consultation

The oil men are still generally consulted formally and informally about policy changes. The sheikhs still invite the Texans to their barbecues. But great changes have occurred in the last three or four years. And those changes, touched off by the deposing of Libyan King Idris in 1969, have led to younger, better-trained and more socially-conscious men gaining influence over national oil policy. In Libya, British Petroleum defied the government; BP is no longer getting any Libyan crude. Similarly, there is little to prevent Kuwait from kicking Gulf out of the country tomorrow, except Gulf's determination to follow Kuwait's orders more diligently than another company pluos tionalists that included Mr. Ben Consequently, the companies have devised a Middle East Mr. Boumedienne is the unstrategy that might be described challenged ruler of his nation, "Yassuh, boss," The companies although Algeria is in theory do what they're told, but no more, presided over by a Revolutionary When instructed to send no Arab Council. In his early years in to America, the companies office, there were several attempts ship it to Europe instead and to kill him. Two would-be assasdivert other Europe-bound oil to sins were reportedly killed by America. When instructed to represidential guards after the murduce output in Abu Dhabi, they der attempt six years ago, in raise it in Nigeria which he was cut by broken glass

The companies aim to delay as long as possible tue inevitable day of total control by producer governments over their oil. Every day's delay means millions of dollars to the companies. In the negotiations over the percentage government control, now going on quietly in every oil countr. the companies' only weapon is their expertise. They have transportation, processing and distribution networks that took decades to create. For the foreseeable future. Kuwait will need a partner like Gulf This gives Gulf some say in the implementation of government policy; where to locate a new locating terminal, the rate of output at particular wells. and so on As for overall production levels or restrictions on destinations of Kuwait crude, Gulf no longer was any influence. Subject of Scrutiny

Meanwhile in the consuming countries the companies are tal:ing advantage of simply fluctuations to extract maximum profits. In some cases, that means engaging in activities that raise regulatory questions. For example, the companies are refusing to renew agreements to supply independent distributors who, as a result, are going bankrupt by the score in every consuming na-tion, The alleged carving up and apportionment of markets by region is another subject of scrutiny by state and federal authorities in the United States.

These actions, which the oilmen call normal business practice, have naturally raised charges that the companies had a hand in arranging the situation they now profit from Whatever the truth of such accusations, the fact is that the oil majors are now diverting investment funds to other oil areas and even other industries. Mobil, for instance, is in the process of acquiring retailer Montgomery Ward.

Even this reallocation of corporate resources carries dangers. Gulf and Shell are spending hundreds of millions to gain a foothold in the nuclear energy business. Other companies are finding few remaining soft touches among host governments. Britain, anticipating energy self-sufficiency in the 1980s, is already considering nationalization of its oil fields to cool off the North Ses oil rush, Such worries, however, aren't enough to deter diversification out of Middle East oil, The era of stable operations there has end-ed, and the companies, which are on no one's side but their own,

By Craig R. Whitney

BONN (NYT).-For Germans, "inflation" means a terrifying, incomprehensible, cruel time between the end of World War I and November, 1923, when money became quite literally worthless. The trauma that resulted from the loss of stable monetary value was one of the reasons for the rise of Adolf Hitler and Nazism, for the second World War and its millions of victims. Even today, the memory of those years haunts West German politics. though only one person in 10 alive here today lived through that time. More lived through another debasement of the currency after World War II. West Germans call their sent-day attempt to control inflation "stability policy." Their battle against it has been relatively successful. Prices here have gone up less than 7 per cent during the last 12 months.

3 Billion to a Dollar

But in April, 1923, a newspaper cost 200 marks. By July, it was 2,000 marks, by November, eight billion. The dollar, then firmly anchored on a gold standard, was worth 575 marks in the late summer of 1922; it was worth 1.65 hillion marks on Aug. 8, 1923. made the West Germans almost superstitious about inflation, and today they have better control over it than any other major industrial power; 1974, acute though the problem of worldwide inflation may be, is not 1933. The German nation at the end of World War I was exhausted, iemoralized, and saddled with huge demands for reparations payments from the Allies, most insistently from the French. The total was fixed at 132 billion gold marks in 1921, and if history had run its course as the Allies foresaw it, the Germans would still be paying that now. But they resisted paying, infuriating French Premier Raymond Poincaré to the point of sending troops to occupy the industrial Ruhr region, seat of German economic power, in January of 1923. The German policy of "passive resistance" to the occupation halted the railroads and drastically alowed production of industrial products and coal. While this may have hurt the French, it hurt German finances worse. The government mints began printing money as fast as the presses could turn it out.

3 Quadrillion Marks

The amount of money in circulation then rose from two trillion marks in January of 1923—already vastly inflated from the 41 hillion in use in 1919—to three quadrillion marks by October. Robert Witt, a 72-old-year resident of Bonn who remembers the time, said: "Every week, the stores would list 'basic prices' of the principal items in the display windows. Next to the list. there was an index-to tell how much more than the basic price things were costing that day. It changed every day."

Large industries sometimes had to give their workers supplementary wages twice a week to keep up with the pace of the in-

"We haven't had any fun since 1914," the waiter said. "If you mada any money it gets no good, and there is only to spend That is what we do. Some day it will be over. I don't know how. Last year I had enough money saved up to buy a Gasthaus in Herrenberg. Now that money wouldn't be four bottles of champagne."

Hemingway noted that a bottle cost 38,000 marks. "Sure,' the waiter went on. I read the French papers. Germany debases her money to cheat the Allies. But what do I get out of it?' That was the tragedy of the German inflation of 1923. It was a financial catastrophe, but only a financial catastrophe -- businesses did not close down or go to ruin, the middle classes did.

Nazi Growth

Joschim Fest writes in massive book "Hitler," that the National Socialist German Workers' party grew by 35,000 new members from February to November of 1923; the SAstorm troopers grew to almost 15,000 men. Though these legions Hitler would take over Germany a decade later. But the inflation, Mr. Fest says, developed eo catastrophically fast that it destroyed not only any motive for supporting the existing order, but also the feeling of any kind of assured existence at all, and accustomed people to living in an atmosphere of the absurd.' It was the collapse of an entire world, its concepts, its norms and its morality. The effects were unforeseesble " Hitler's first putsch, in Munich

For, by November, a new German government under Gustav Stresemenn had given up the passive resistance." Schacht, then currency commis sioner and later Hitler's economics minister, ended the inflation by declaring that henceforth one new mark, called a Renten-on Nov. 9, 1923, failed, and his currency was backed by gold and guaranteed by the entire German financial and industrial community. Though small fortunes were thus wiped out, capital-factories and real estate that were the base mark, would replace and equal a trillion old marks. The new

of the German economic strength -was not. Then, as now, the "little man" suffered most from inflation. After the currency stabilization of 1923, and agreement on a new schedule of reparations payments —the Dawes plan of 1924—German industry recovered its strength. The next, and a worse crisis, that of the worldwide depression of the 1930s, was not inflationary but exactly the opposite. Its consequences, political and military, were even worse, A Talk With Leader

Communist Role In Portugal

By Rosalie Comes

T ISBON (IRT).-The history of the Portuguese opposition di the last half century is still to be written. During the perk dictatorship, censors smothered nearly all mention of claude political activity, strikes and general unrest. Many observers, t fore, both Portuguese and foreign, were surprised to see that Communist party had managed to maintain its organization in of the constant struggle with the efficient secret police (PI

In the five-month-old Lisbon government, which has all had two serious shake-ups, fow people can be as conscious of the need for political unity as Alvaro Cunhal, minister without portfolio and secretary of the

Portuguese Communist party.

Brought back to Lisbon from exile in Prague by the April military take-over ending the 4syear dictorship, Mr. Cunhal was immediately invited to participate in the newly formed government. "Given the active role played by Communist party militants in the anti-fascist opposition, everyone realized at once that it would be impossible to attempt to build a democracy in Portugal without Communist participation," Mr. Cunhal said.

Yet Communist participation, so preponderant because it was the only organized party in April, was heavily attacked by Gen. Antonio de Spinola shortly be-fore his resignation a week ago.

To protect itself during the underground years, the party issued no cards and kept a minimum of written information. "We kept no files, but worked with the method of 'compartmentalizing' information. Each member knew only a limited number of other members and these names were memorized. The PIDE knew of this method and tortured our militants to obtain these mental "files". After April 25, we began issuing membership cards for the first time, but to protect our members we have discontinued this practice."

When two months after the coup a Newsweek journalist stated that if elections were held in Portugal at that moment, the Communists would poll 20 per cent of the vote, he was, "in possession of more information than the party itself," according to Mr. Cunhal.

By Thomas E. Mullaney NEW YORK, Oct. 6 (NYT) .-Two months ago, in the waning days of the Nixon administration, the stock market stood battered and bruised in the area of 800 for the Dow-Jones Industrial Average after a drop of about 250 points from its historic high of only 18 months earlier. It was a precipitous drop in a relatively short period and was attributed to adverse trends in the economy, high interest rates and the grow-ing lack of confidence in the nation because of the Watergate

As it became apparent in the first week of August that Richard Nixon would resign the presidency rather than face the trial of impeachment, the stock market rallied and investors seemed to take heart over the prospect of new national leadership by Gerald Ford. But the enthusiasm was limited to a three-day period and a total gain of about 45 points on the Dow chart as investors and the nation adopted a "wait-and-see" attitude, looking for new programs and new faces in the incoming administration.

But since Aug. 9, the economy has weakened further, inflation has shown no signs of abating, international tensions over oil and other matters have not been relieved, no new courses have been charted and, for the most part, the same old crew is manning the ship of state.

Slide Resumed

As a result, the stock market, in its usual role as a thermometer of public confidence and a baro-meter of the general outlook, quickly resumed its long slide. It now stands below the 600 level on the Dow scale-down almost 30 per cent during the brief tenure of President Ford, Last week, that key index slipped down into the high 500 band in a continued reflection of the dark mood of pessimism that pervades the land. The Dow industrials ended the week at 584.56,

Many analysts believe that the market once again has been overreacting. They contend that the economy is stronger than investors currently believe. That may well be true, but confidence has been badly shaken, and it will take more than the quarter-point drop in the banks prime rate from its historic peak to bolster the market again.

Some actions must be instituted to demonstrate the nation's ability and willingness to face up to its problems and to assert its leadership to the world.

the last eight weeks.

Last week, President Ford dem-onstrated his determination to do that in the political area when he agreed to appear before Congress this Thursday, Oct. 10, to answer questions about the Nixon pardon. And he will have the opportunity to gain similar credibility when he unveils his economic package this Tuesday. At the conclusion of the innovative conference on inflation in Washington a week ago, Mr. Ford gave some evidence of movement when he named several top government, business and labor leaders to participate in various economic councils and committees to advise him on courses of action on a "man-to-man and face-to-face" basis. That attitude on accessibility, which the President exhibited so well by his extensive personal participation in the inadmiration.

The administration's task is to establish a positive program not only to address the grave prob-lem of inflation but also to fight economic stagnation and to draft a most crucial national energy

There still needs to be greater agreement and coordination on that issue in the administration and a forthright action program, which, hopefully, will be enunciated in coming weeks. As Sidney Jones, one of the Presi-dent's economic counselors, put it so well before a group of economists in New York last Wed-nesday: "Without a creditable energy policy, much of what we do in general is going to be looked upon with skepticism."

What will emerge, however, is quite uncertain at the moment. The President received a cram course on the nation's economic problems at the White House summit conference and the 12 preliminary meetings last month, but be also was handed an ex-tremely wide range of specific suggestions—one aide said there were 86 microeconomic measures that could be adopted now and more than 200 that could be put into effect over a period of time. But many were self-interest ideas, or partisan programs that would do more harm than good if they were to be put forth.

The President's top advisers reportedly are divided on some of the major proposals, especially one for putting new excise taxes on gasoline to try to reduce consumption.

Among the proposals that the President is likely to adopt are these: Some kind of tax relief Prices in the credit markets, especially among corporate bonds, fell sharply under heavy pressure from large new offerings entering (Continued on Page 11, Col. 4)

Where to find Jack Daniel's-a little help for our friends.

If you're having a difficult time finding Jack Daniel's, perhaps the list below will help. It names some of the restaurants, bars and hotels where our fine Tennessee Whiskey is served.

The demand for Jack Daniel's is great. But the supply can only be made through the slow, exacting process perfected by Mr. Jack Daniel. Each drop is mellowed through 12 feet of hard maple charcoal, then aged and watched over until it's ready to send your way. It takes time. But just one sip, we believe, will convince you that it's worth the wait.

an issue price of 99. The previous private placement was for Austria's Tauern Motorway and carried a 10 per cent coupon. The quarter-point difference on this 15 million DM. five-year note was due to the government guarantee it carried. The credit institute's paper has no state guarantee.

The 200-million DM public issue for Australia, sold at 99 with a coupon of 10 per cent, did very well in the secondary market, trading at 100 1/4 bid-101 asked. This six-year paper carried a government guarantee, which is what the Mideast investors are

Overall, top-quality DM bonds were bid up by about 2 per cent during the week. By contrast, dollar prices weakened as interest rates moved down and the dollar's value suffered on the foreign exchange markets

Although registered for sale in the United States, Mitsui's $25-million convertible issue is also being marketed in Europe, About a quarter of the issue is expected to be sold here, reportedly to intermediaries acting for Mideast investors. The issue is to carry a coupon of 8 3/4 per cent-historically high for a convertible -and is expected to have a conversion price into common stock at a 3 to 5 per cent premium over the current Tokyo quote.

Bank Loans There are a number of syndicated bank loans being put together. Mitsubishi has arranged a three-year $30-million loan at 1 1/8 over LIBOR.

Supply Commission is arranging a $25-million credit at 1 1/4 points over the three or six-montth LIBOR. Although the three and six-month rates are currently identical, the three-month rate has often been cheaper due to the heavy pressure on the six-month rate because so many loans are fied to it.

Bankers will be paying special attention to how the $245-million loan for Metropolitan Edison fares. Utilities have been hard hit in the United States since Consolidated Edison (not related to Metropolitan) omitted its dividend. Dake Power a few weeks ago was forced to abandon its efforts to raise money here. Metropolitan, a unit of General Public Utilities Corp., is offering to pay 1 1/4 points over the threemonth LIBOR for the first two years and 1 3/8 points for the final two years. It is also expected that the Federal Reserve system will be encouraged to continue to move forward with a somewhat relaxed monetary policy to drive interest rates down significantly over the next six months.

It does not seem likely that much can be done to achieve significant reductions in the federal budget, but lip service certainly will continue to be paid to the need for "fiscal discipline." Although it is not expected that the President will choose any new form of wage-price controls, he might be inclined to embrace some form of "incomes policy" to try to hold wage and price increases to moderate levels, some sources

Pan Am Hearings Postponed Today By Senate Panel

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6 (NYT) Senate hearings into the pro-priety of procedures of the De-partment of Transportation and the Civil Aeronautics Board have been abruptly postponed because two senior senators said the hearings might upset efforts to save Pan American World Ah-way from financial collapse.

The hearings, scheduled to begin tomorrow, were postponed at the last minute by Sen. Edward Kennedy. D-Mass., after Sen. Warren Magnuson, D-Wash, who is chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, and Sen. Howard Cannon, D-Nev., chairman of its aviation subcommittee, warned that hearings might confuse the financial community about the nature of efforts being made to help Pan American.

While he agreed to postpone the hearings. Sen. Kennedy charged that the effort hy the Department of Transportation and the CAB seemed to have violated the Administrative Procedures Act "and may well cost the consumer even more than the equivalent direct subsidy."

After President Ford rejected a $10.2-million-a-month subsidy request. Transportation Secretary Claude Brinegar announced on 1.943.031.431 sheres Sept. 18 a seven-point program to help the airline. Included in the program was an administra-tion promise to encourage United States flag airlines to consolidate and restructure overseas routes, to urge the CAB to increase over that charge U.S. afrlines higher of the surport landing and other fees.

U.S. Airlines' Bid Rejected by CAB

WASHINGTON, Oct. 6 (Reu-ters).—A plan by Pan American and American Airlines to exchange routes serving the South Pacific and the Caribbean was tentatively rejected last week by a Civil Agrangutics Board judge. In a decision still to be con-

Penn 14, Brown 9 At Providence, R.I., Adolph Beilizeare scored on a 61-yard punt return and Matty Vaughn hit his split end, Bob Bucola, with a 7-yard touchdown pass as Penn-sylvania rallied in the fourth period for a 14-9 Ivy League rictory over Brown.

The Elis, picked by many as the Ivy League favorite, tuned up for their league opener against Brown bere next week by gaining 322 yards with their vaunted ground attack. Yale's captain, Rudy Green, paced the offense with 142 yards in 17 carries. Green got Yale's first touch-

Penn St. 21, Army 14

At West Point, Army took advantage of two Penn State fumbles in the first three min-utes of play and ran off to a surprising 14-0 first-quarter lead over the Nittany Lions. The Cadets looked as if they would enulate Navy, which upset Penn State, 7-6, two weeks ago when the Lions lost five of seven fumbles to the Midshipmen. But after the imitial shock, Penn State turned things around and managed to gain a 21-14 victory for the Lions' third victory in four games this season. expected to have this much trouble with the Cadets. As a result, the remaining schedule for Penn State begins to appear a bit more difficult than predicted earlier. They will face such opponents as North Carolina State, Syracuse, Pittsburgh and Maryland. Unless Penn State cuts down on mistakes and manages to mix an air attack with inside ground moves, coach Joe Paterno's team might lose again this season.

THE ODD WOMAN By Gail Godwin, Knopf. 419 pp. $8.95.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard

WOMEN deserve what they in- here a curious tendency ! spire, says a French proverb. and I have been wondering just what Jane Clifford, the heroine of "The Odd Woman," inspires. She is too reserved and analytical, "too conscious of too many things at once," to inspire passior. Too intelligent and selfpossessed to inspire pity. Too intangible to call forth love.

She doesn't even inspire talk, for though she is good at it, it has, in her case, an almost medicinal quality, like hormone pills for a deficiency. What she inspires, I think, is a term paper in a fashionable seminar, one with a title like "Womao in Limbo.

Jane is 32, attractive, reasonable, heterosexual and unmarried. As far as I can make out, she would like to marry but is inhibited from doing so hy some unspecific fear of curtailment. Whether her inhibition is justified or not is difficult to ascer-tein, for she is also too inhibited to have an orgasm or a bowel movement when she spends a few days with her lover.

Gabriel, her lover, is a professor of art history and Jane is a professor of literature. In Miss Godwin's view, this permits them to have some of the most rarefied conversations I have read in some time. On one occasion, after having discharged his physical responsibilities, Gabriel falls asleep during the metaphysical catechism that follows. A man's work, to paraphrase the old saw, is never done.

Gabriel has been married to someone else for 25 years and shows no signs of wishing to hreak this legal contract. Ir fact, he and Jane never speak of it. She is too tactful to initiate such an awkward conversation. Gabriel is too factful, on his side, even to comment on something so natural as Jane's appearance. Gabriel sees things "under the eye of eternity" and this, we are told, enables him to forget past and future and exist in "the present moment" to an enviable degree. I don't see the causal relationship here. On the con-trary, it strikes me as doubtful.

Though his special field is the prersphaelite painters, whom he admires for their life-enhancing specificity, his affair with Jane seems to me as abstract as a Mondrian, She keeps wanting to look up his euphemized endearments in the Oxford English Dictionary

I found their lovemaking bafflingly vague, and I believe I see

Soviet Union Triumphs

MOSCOW, Oct 6 (UPI) -The Soviet Union defeated Team Can-ada, 3-2, tonight in the final gama of their eight-game international ice hockey series. The victory gave the Soviets a 4-1 lesd in the series. Three games ended in

The Canadians complained ouce again about the refereeing, this time by West Germany's Joseph Kompala, who awarded two major penalties against the Canadians. Captain Pat Stapleton went off for 10 minutes for misconduct and Jim Harrison lost five minutes for slashing.

Team Canada officials decided to go shead with the game after a meeting earlier with Soviet of-ficials about yesterday's game, which the Canadians claim to have won, 5-4. Soviet officials re-fused to allow the Canadians' last goal, which was scored on the final whistle, and they refused to restore time lost in a timekeeping dispute earlier in the game.

In apparent recognition of the Canadians' anger, the Soviet Ice Hockey Federation issued a warping just before tonight's game threatening to stop play at the first instance of dirty play. The federation said Team Can-ads has 'repeatedly broken the agreement signed by the World Hockey Association and the U.S.S.R. Hockey Federation on adhering to the rules of the in-ternational ice hockey league." The statement accused the Canadians of playing dirty, arguing with the referees and violating "the best traditions of sport and friendship." In fact, tonight's game had more penalties than any of the others in Moscow-15 in all, 10 of them against Canada.

Saturday's Game

MOSCOW, Oct. 6 (NYT). Team Canada battled to a disputed 4-4 tie with the Soviet national hockey team last night, claiming victory on an end-of-the game goal by Gordie Howe. But the referees ruled that Howe's goal came after time had

He also said that last night's game was the first in which the electronic Soviet scoreboard did not show tenths of seconds.

There were tenths of seconds left," he said. With the synchro-nized Soviet timing and goal-scoring equipment, he declared, "the only way the red light can go on is because the game had Boris Kulagin, the Soviet coach,

Dodgers Take 2-Game Lead

Ron Cey homered in the fourth inning today and touched off a three-run eighth-inning rally with his second double, enabling the Los Angeles Dodgers to defeat the Pittsburgh Pirates, 5-3, and move to within a victory of their first National League pennant in eight years.

The Dodgers, who blanked the Pirates, 3-0, yesterday, return to Los Angeles for game No. 3 Tuesday and need to win only one of the scheduled three games there clinch the pennant.

Cey hit a solo bomer off starter Jim Rooker off the leftfield foul pole in the fourth inning, but it was his line double down the leftfield line off Dave Giusti, leading off the eighth, that triggered the Dodgers' winning raily.

The Pirates, blanked for six innings by Andy Messersmith, had scored twice in the seventh

The Dodgers, who had blown scoring opportunities against Rooker in the fifth, sixth and seventh innings, then completed their big inning with successive nin-scoring singles by pinch-hitter Manny Mote and Dave Lopes.

It was, however, the poor defensive play of catcher Manny Sanguillen which contributed as much as anything to the Dodger rally. After Cey doubled to lead off the inning, Bill Russell bunted in front of the plate and Sanguillen's throw to third was too late to Get Cey, who accred sub-sequently on Crawford's single. Russell found himself on third moments later when Sanguillen tried to pick him off second and threw the ball into centerfield. these days? Baker Mecklin would start by eating the Congressional Record, "I baye tried it boiled," he writes, "and it is not half bad. It is certainly better to eat than to read."

But I shall omit his asides and relate only the basic plan, "If we can persuade large numbers of people to eat the Coogressional Record each day," be writes, "we may begin to terrorize Congress. * * *

Mecklin reasons as follows: Because of the limited number of Congressional Records published daily, a huge demand for this relatively cheap food would quickly produce big, hungry, nasty crowds at the Government Printing Office each night fighting to get Congressional Records for their suppers.

"Soop congressmen, realizing that their words were being eaten as fast as they were printed, would begin to feel that some part of them was being consum ..." writes Mecklin, "It is a small leap of the mind, even for a congressman, to imagine that people developing a taste for this sort of thing may soon start trooping up to the Capitol to sick their teeth into the real thing."

A congressman in this frame of mind he believes, is a congressman who will stop talking about inflation and start doing something about it,

Fears would be reinforced, in Mecklin's plan, when Internal Revenue sends out its tax forms next spring. By that time, he assumes, millions of people who receive

Mass national consumption of Form 1040, deep-fried or grilled, would rouse the government to get supermarket prices down, he believes, since government men would be threatened with payless pay days so long as people were eating Form 1040 instead of mailing it back with money.

"At this stage," Mecklin writes "it will still be necessary to prod all thuse do-nothing people who the problem is so complex it will take years to solve. From the consumer's viewpoint, these peo-ple seem to be useless. Closer reflection, however, shows they are

"Considering the money we pay for these birds," he says, "it is only sensible to eat them once the food bill goes higher than their salarles, Economically, they will have become the better buy Bt that time "

Mecklin believes the force of this logic, if presented to the men in charge, will do wonders against inflation, "Once we let Earl Buz know we are perfecting a recipe for Secretary of Agriculture Scallopine and get word to the business world that we are smacking our lips at the prospect of President of Grocery Chain Bonne Femme, prices should start dropping rapidly."
